From November 5 to 14, 2019, the Milieux Institute held the MilieuXBauhaus Festival. Milieux's graduate student researchers, much like the Bauhaus students of a century ago, are interested in the fundamental engagements between art, technology, culture, and design. The program featured an open house, two parties, two performances, nine workshops, 10 screenings, and 13 talks by Milieux members and visiting scholars. The Goethe Institute, SenseFactory, and the Canadian Embassy in Berlin were community partners in producing this cross-disciplinary event focused on critical reflection.

MilieuxMake Workshop: Bacterial Portraiture

The BioLab led its first Bacteriart workshop of the year yesterday, November 14, 2019, by our Jonas Salk bacterial portraits that we created with our collaborator, Dr. Marcotte this summer and based on a workshop developed by WhiteFeather Hunter—as well as research done by our lab members and our research-creation team: The Bactinctorium—the lab decided to use the pigment producing bacteria Serratia marcescens to create portraits of the scientist.

Undergraduate Fellows

For the third year, Milieux welcomed a group of standout undergraduates who became involved in research clusters with the Undergraduate Fellowships.

Undergraduate Fellows are nominated by Milieux's cluster directors in the fall. Fellows receive $500 each, plus access to all of Milieux's labs and common areas for the duration of the academic year. The Fellows took part in a Pecha-Kucha presentation open to all Milieux members and faculty. This annual event gives fellows the opportunity to share their research interests and personal observations while honing their speaking skills before an engaged and supportive audience.

Previous fellows have gone on to pursue graduate studies with Milieux, developing their relationships with research clusters and their members.

Transitions was a four-day field intensive inspired by Bauhaus and led by the Speculative Life cluster. Students and faculty traveled to La Station, the decommissioned Nun's Island gas station (1969) designed by Mies van Der Rohe (last principal of the Bauhaus), which has been recently converted into an intergenerational community centre (2011).

There, they collectively imagined and proposed material and ecological transitions toward post-Anthropocene/Capitalocene futures.

Four Chambers' work is featured exclusively on her website, A Four Chambered Heart, which is only accessible to viewers who are paying members of her Patreon. Modelled after the painterly soft-core websites of the 1990s, Patreon is an online crowdfunding platform that allows fans to support an artist's practice on an ongoing basis. In this case, individual viewers pay nine dollars a month in exchange for exclusive access to the artist's work. At the height of their success, Chambers charged $1,3796 per video from this platform, which was the highest price point in a highly saturated internet porn market. She achieved this success entirely through Four Chambers' active social media presence, concentrated in the form of her Tumblr and Instagram accounts. There, soft-core images of silky bodies dominate, with skin blemishes and dark shadows concealing errant nipples and bushes.

Letter from the Editors

This year, so much of our work at Yiara has been about adapting to and finding ways to continue our projects despite the challenges of the pandemic. Yiara has always been interested in exploring different ways of telling stories and providing space for thought and discussion around them. The circumstances of the past year have forced us to think more deeply about how we can do this. We have been reflecting on how to bring people together again, how to facilitate meaningful connection. We made a conscious effort to find ways to connect with each other and with the communities we work with, even if it was through video calls or online events. We are infinitely grateful to have had the opportunity to do this. We collaborated with many artists and creators, and felt that we were part of something bigger than ourselves. We trust in the power of art, trust, and of course, creativity.

As we prepared volume 09, we grappled with difficult times. Acts of creation are ultimately acts of care. To make something is to make sense of it, to turn the uncertain into something recognizable and meaningful. In this volume, we have enacted this routine of care and creation, and in doing so, we have enacted our own quietly transformative acts from within.

Yiara Magazine is a student-run, undergraduate feminist art publication. Based in Montreal, Yiara publishes an annual print issue of curated student writing and artwork, organizes a variety of workshops, discussions and lectures, and hosts an end-of-year vernissage and magazine launch.

Yiara's online platform brings together a larger artistic and scholarly community by publishing a variety of essays, artworks, reviews and interviews which contribute to the ongoing dialogue of issues raised by intersectional feminism.

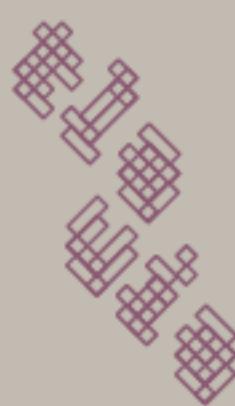

By encouraging feminist dialogue within the field of art, we hope to raise critical questions on the art historical canon, study feminist representation, pay tribute to women and figures of the past, explore ideas of gender, and the self and give voice to students concerned with these themes in their work and practice.

Yiara Magazine was founded by Raissa Paes in 2012.
